

Flat Leaf Parsley Information Pack

Introduction

Flat-leaf parsley (AKA Italian parsley) is a member of the Apiaceae family, alongside celery and carrots. It's prized for its bright, clean, peppery flavour and delicate, flat leaves.

This variety thrives in the temperate Surrey climate, producing strong, aromatic foliage throughout the year. Regular hand-picking ensures tender, vibrant leaves and encourages new growth for continual harvests

Parsley is a biennial crop, meaning it survives more than one year, flowering in the second. This is important as the plant is left in the ground over winter and acts as a vital shield against soil erosion in the harsher months.

High in vitamins A, C and K, supporting immunity and bone health. Contains iron, calcium and magnesium, ideal for plant-based diets. Rich in antioxidants and chlorophyll, contributing to detoxification and overall wellbeing.

Farm Information

Our flat-leaf parsley is grown at Hurst Farm in Surrey, a few miles from Chef's Farms HQ. The crop is hand-harvested early every morning by Greg and the team to capture peak freshness.

The farm's sandy-loam soil drains well so is ideal for growing herbs and leafy greens. This rich soil supports a diverse rotation of crops, many of which already feature across your menus.

At Hurst Farm, parsley is grown in rotated strips among other herbs and salad crops to encourage biodiversity and reduce pest pressure naturally. The team avoids monocropping, instead working with the landscape to maintain soil health and attract beneficial insects.

The farm's sustainable growing approach includes using protective netting when needed (to deter birds and insects) and natural composts to enrich the soil, ensuring a consistent, high-quality herb with minimal synthetic inputs.
