

Jersey Royal Potatoes Information Pack

Introduction

Your Jersey Royal potatoes are grown by Steve Baudains at Le Coin farm on Jersey. As with most farmers on the island, Steve's family have been cultivating this land for multiple generations. Le Coin is LEAF marque certified and part of a collective of growers that supply Jersey Royals into the UK market whilst protecting the strict heritage of the crop.

Crop Information

Jersey Royals are an early cropping 'new' potato variety. The warm climate on Jersey means everything happens a little earlier in the year, meaning we get these potatoes from mid-April, at a time when many mainland potato crops are still seedlings, adding to their allure.

Potato farming requires a lot of soil disturbance so can be damaging to soil health. Steve addresses this by employing a diverse and species rich crop rotation to give the soil a rest alongside the traditional application of seaweed from local beaches as a natural fertilizer, reducing his reliance on synthetic chemical inputs.

Product

Jersey Royals are a fiercely protected variety due to their rich flavour and creamy texture. Much of these desirable traits come from the land and methods with which they are farmed. Much like wine, they have a terroir that emulates the rich, coastal soils in which they grow. As with most new potatoes, Jersey Royals are eaten with the skin on, meaning much of the vitamin and mineral content that is concentrated in the skin is eaten.
